SAFE IS BLOWN AT THE INWOOD ELEVATOR

Nitro-glycerine Used By Local or Expert
Talent To Get Large sum of Money
From J. C. Erwin-No Clue to Burglars.

Tuesday night about two o'clock burglars entered the Inwood elevator of J. C. Erwin and blew to pieces the safe with nitro-glycerine. The thieves secured a large amount of money, though the exact sum is unknown. They also got about a dollar's worth of stamps.

Mr. J. C. Erwin is proprietor of the elevator and has been doing an especially heavy business. Inwood not having any banking facilities, it was necessary for Mr. Erwin to carry a large amount of change for his trade, and all this reason the amount of money in the safe was larger than usual, all of which doubtless the burglars knew.

The explosion of the charge tore the door off the safe and otherwise damaged it. The explosion was heard by several of the village but no one went to see.

No clue to the thieves could be found. Whether it is local or expert talent could not be determined, but a thorough investigation is being made and if any clue to the culprits is found it will be followed to the end.

N. E. Goodyear, who works at the elevator was the first to see the work of the burglars when he went to work about 6:30 in the morning.

TO CELEBRATE THE DIAMOND JUBILEE NOV. 6

HISTORY OF APPLE GROWING IN INDIANA GIVEN BY MR.
WOODBURY AT PURDUE

WHENCE CAME INSECTS

Horticulturists Must Now Care for Their Trees by Spraying and Other

The Indiana State Horticultural Society, promoting the movement for the apple show in Indianapolis, opening Nov. 6, is one of the oldest and most substantial institutions in the state, it having for 75 years been a highly important factor in the development of the Hoosier land. Before Johnny Applesed, the father of Indiana apple orchards was in his grave in 1847, the society was at its work of developing the state fruit resources, and the coming show will really be in celebration of its diamond jubilee, with the most elaborate exposition it has ever held. In promoting apple culture, the society has as the years have gone by had to contend with constantly increasing odds in the way of orchard enemies, which have not only ravaged the orchards but discouraged the growers until they learned how to combat the evils.

Johnny Applesed, or John Chapman, was the first planter of orchards in the middle West. He obtained the seeds from the cider presses of Pennsylvania and scattered them along the streams and through the woods of the Indiana wilderness. From his day to this it has been evident to the members of the society that Indiana has both soil and climate for fruit culture, and what is needed now is to revive the spirit and determination of the pioneers who brought the first orchards into bearing. This revival is expected to come through the apple show.

Henry Ward Beecher, then living in Indianapolis, in 1843 stated that there were 18 nurseries in the state, selling apple tree at 10 cents each and pear trees at 20 cents and doing a good business, while the long summers, brilliantly clear atmosphere, great warmth and dryness during the fall ripening months, give our fruit great size, color and flavor. When the society met in 1844, 130 varieties of Hoosier-grown apples were exhibited.

Back in those days most of the pests now contended with had not appeared in the orchards. The San Jose scale was still in Western Asia. The codling moth, while known in eastern orchards, had not caught up with the western march of the apple and the virgin soil was undepleted of its plant food. The pioneer growers saw little and knew less of the fungus diseases. Apples growing was apparently unhampered by the effort and scientific thought that is necessary now. Perfect, ripened fruit, not dollars and cents, brought the rewards the pioneer sought.

As the state emerged from pioneer conditions, as forest were cleared and highways were built that settlements might be thicker, the codling moth and the curculio came over the routes from the east that were followed by the incoming population, without doubt coming in fruit and trees brought by settlers. As the distance between orchards became less, the enemies of fruit and tree multiplied and found it possible to travel by easy stages from one part of the state to another, leaving infested and diseased orchards in their trail.

In recent years the apple grower has found ways of fighting the enemies of fruit and the past season has been unremitting warfare waged in every county. Spraying, careful observation and study have gone far to give the growers the upper hand against the pests. While there is more work and thought involved in apple cultivation today than 50 years ago, growers who are mastering horticulture are winning a wealth of satisfaction from perfected crops, and this satisfaction will be strongly in evidence in the glowing arrays of apples which will be spread before the public at the coming show.

MASSACHUSETTS PRIMARIES

Frothingham and Foss Win Despite Small Vote Cast.

Boston, Sept. 27.—General apathy and Louis A. Frothingham, Republican machine candidate for governor, were the leading features of the first test of the state wide direct primaries. Frothingham appears to be an easy winner over his opponents, Speaker Joseph A. Walker and Representative Norman H. White. The vote was barely more than 100,000 and of this number more than 40,000 ballots were cast in Boston alone.

Governor Foss, although opposed by Thomas I. Hissen of Springfield, had no difficulty in winning the Democratic nomination for governor.

ROLPH ELECTED MAYOR

San Francisco, Sept. 27.—James Rolph, Jr., is the new mayor of San Francisco, according to partial returns of the primary election, held here.
